Part 1: Metaverse Data Analysis Report

1. Sales

Overall December sales in the metaverse (the major metaverse projects) were up $23.64 million, or 113.89%, from November (November was up 89% from October).

Otherside's total land sales continued to decline in June, July, August, September and October after the primary market offering in May this year, but virtual real estate sales bucked the trend in November and December, with December's virtual real estate sales up 130.97% from November. Because of its large absolute value of transaction amount, it played a decisive role in the rise of virtual real estate transactions in the metaverse in December.

3. Number of sales

The trend in the number of virtual real estate sales and the average sales price of the eight metaverse platforms basically showed the opposite trend.

Otherside, Worldwide Webb, Voxels, Somnium Space, Netvrk all saw significant increases in the number of virtual real estate sales in December, with Otherside's virtual real estate sales volume sales rising by as high as 134.86% and Worldwide Webb's virtual real estate sales volume sales rising by as high as 100%.

Number of sales of The Sandbox and Decentraland decreased of 28.3% and 21.48% respectively in December compared to November.

4. Traffic

Voxels traffic was 312,000 in December, 466,000 in November and 362,000 in October, a 33% drop in traffic compared to November. The increase and decrease of traffic are related to the spontaneous behavior of Voxels platform players, but not related to the behavior of Voxels program.

Decentraland traffic was 526,000 in December, 758,000 in November, and 850,000 in October, with a 30.1% drop in traffic compared to November. Some players left after the MVMF event in November, resulted in a significant drop in traffic compared to November in December.

Picture of Decentraland monthly traffic histogram

Note: The absolute value of Decentraland traffic is currently higher than Voxels, but the traffic sources are all from official ports, and since the statistic specification of different platforms may not be consistent, the results of the horizontal comparison may not be representative, so it is for reference only at this time.

5. Renting Data

virtual real estate renting data is collected from LandWorks, which currently supports virtual real estate rent for Decentraland and Voxels.

In December, LandWorks leased 18 virtual real estates (compared to 25 lands in November) for $2,689 (compared to $2,858 in November).

Significantly, Decentraland also officially launched a virtual real estate renting product in December, which does not have a great impact in terms of LandWorks' data performance.

The Metaverse Real Estate Index (MREI) is an index that measures the price of virtual real estate in the metaverse. It is calculated by combining the sales volume, sales volume, and sales unit price of the eight major metaverse projects.

As we can see from the trend chart of the MREI indicator and ETH fluctuations, the MREI index continues to maintain a weak negative correlation with ETH prices in December, indicating a weakening correlation between the Metaverse and the Crypto market.
